HOW STANDS THE MATTER ! The prominent topic at present uppermost in the the ordinance of 1787, cannot the people of these States adopt amended constitutions, introducing slavery within their limits in spite of Congress? Or if any new State is admitted into the Union with the "Wilmot Proviso" annexed as a condition of admission, cannot the people of such a state come together at any time after admission, if they chose so to do, and alter their constitution so as to legalize slavery therein?

"2. If these enquiries are answered in the affirmative as it seems to me they must, I should like to enquire whether Congress has the right or power under the Constitution to say whether slavery shall or shall not exist in any State? And if it has not then, what is the use of this hue and cry about the "Wilmot Proviso," the "Nebraska bill," or any other act of Congress relating to the subject in the States? "I should like from you, or some of your correspondents, a candid answer to these enquiries. They should be examined according to the existing state of things, as the matter now stands, not as we might wish them to be. Our constitution, not our desires, must be our guide. I have opinions of my own on the subject of slavery, formed upon a careful examination of its history, and a watchful attention of the cordance with many politicians with whom I have been associated. They may not, however, be the less officer, and it was not taken off until they exhibited if on this, or any other matter, I am wrong, I wish to be set right, and shall be grateful to any one for doing it."

We had supposed that it was settled, if anything can be said to be settled, AGAINST the power of congress to legislate as to the internal policy of a state. To establish this policy, and to always regulate it, is one of its reserved rights-inherent, derived from an original assumption and exercise by the OLD THIRTEEN colonies, of the principle of the sovereignty of the right, first exercised this power; the people of each, acting according to their separate customs, laws, habits, and natural tendencies, land hold of it in 1776, the immense value of this right all along their colonial experience, and this induced them to assert it .-Hence on this principle they formed their state go veraments; and acting as separate and independent communities - as they were in fact long before the fourth of July, 1776 -they agreed to form a UNION, and gave originally, as from a primary source of power, the power to make the declaration of independence; and made this mutual pledge of Union, on the great condition of retaining this right of sovereignty; and this same principle they adhered to in the articles of the confederation, and in the present constitution.

Is it to be for a moment held that the original thirteen states, only established this principle for themselves? Is it for a moment to be pretended that Louisiana and Ohio have not as per/ect a sovereignty as Massachusetts! If not, then all the States stand on the great original principle of EQUALITY as to each other. On no other principle could the old thirteen have ever united in union; or agreed to form a or entered into articles of CONFEDERATION, or into the more perfect bond of the constitution.

Passing the question of the right of congress to egislate for the territories, alluded to in the above communication, we know not how better to answer our esteemed correspondent, than by the following quotation from President Taylor's California message of January 21, 1850

Any attempt to deny to the people of the State the right of self-government, in a matter which peculiarly affects themselves, will infallibly be regarded by them as an invasion of their rights; and upon the principles laid down in our own declaration of independence, they will certainly be sustained by the great mass of the American people.
